Hi Krista,

I wanted to reach out and give some context around the two-week suspension I received related to attendance.

When this was first raised in December, I acknowledged it, took the feedback seriously, and made changes. Since then, I've been consistently on time or early, which I felt showed that I heard the concern and was actively correcting it.

Yesterday's incident was an isolated lapse, not a continuation of the earlier issue. However, it was treated as an "ongoing problem," and the decision didn't seem to take that period of consistency into account. That's the part I'm struggling with — not accountability itself, but the lack of recognition that corrective effort and improvement did happen.

I'm not reaching out to challenge policy or avoid responsibility. I just felt it was important to flag that the situation was handled as though nothing had changed since December, despite sustained effort to address it. Given that I had previously shared concerns with you early on about communication and management style, I thought it was appropriate to document this now.

My goal in reaching out is simply to ensure that improvement and corrective effort are being accurately reflected when serious disciplinary decisions are made.

Thanks for taking the time to read this. I wanted you to be aware.

Best regards,
Tylor

Dear Elisca,

Following up on our conversation regarding the January 30th date and the 14-day suspension, I am providing time-stamped evidence that proves Management was formally notified of my burnout and the "double-duty" workload long before this discipline was issued.
Please include the following points and the attached screenshots in the formal grievance:

1. Proof of "Notice of Burnout" (Dec 16–17)
The attached screenshots from December 16th and 17th—sent immediately following my first meeting with Stacy—prove that I was not "ignoring rules," but was physically and mentally collapsing.

• The Overload: I explicitly stated I was "doing two or three people's jobs at once" and running the "whole meat department and receiving".

• The Warning: I told my manager that this workload was "exhausting" and "killing me".

• The Misread Tone: I documented that my manager reads my "intensity" and "passion" as "defiance", despite the fact that I stay late to make up for any lapses.

2. Breach of CBA (Article 14.1)
From December 1st through early January, I acted as the de facto Meat Supervisor during the peak holiday rush.

• Under Article 14.1, I am owed the $1/hour Relief Premium for this entire 5-week period.

• It is a violation of the CBA to demand supervisor-level responsibility while denying the contractually mandated pay, and then issuing a maximum-level suspension when that uncompensated workload leads to burnout.

3. Disproportionality of Discipline
Even with the January 30th "discussion," jumping to a 14-day unpaid suspension on February 4th is punitive, not corrective.

• Progressive discipline requires the employer to consider mitigating factors.

• My evidence proves Stacy was warned about the burnout and the "human context" of my situation (including the fact that I walk to work in all weather) but chose to ignore it in favor of "spreadsheet management".

Conclusion:
I am requesting that the 14-day suspension be rescinded or significantly reduced to a written warning or a 1-day suspension. I have proven I can maintain perfect attendance when the workload is sustainable (as I did throughout January), but I cannot be disciplined for a lapse caused by a workload that the company failed to support or pay for correctly.

I look forward to your update on the next steps for the grievance hearing.

Regards,

Tylor Flett

Hello Tylor.

I followed up with LR to confirm what took place on January 30th. They advised that it was an in-person discusion at the store (not a phone call) with the Assistant Store Manager, Josh Jones. Their records show that you arrived more than an hour late for your scheduled shift that day. The purpose of the conversation was to address your ongoing pattern of lateness and to make it clear that any further incidents would result in the employer taking next steps. You then received the two week suspension on February 4 for reporting more than an hour late for your 7:30am shift, and this was after Stacy had called you. This information does not change the strength of the grievance, as the store can show that you were late 7 times over approximately 9 weeks. While they acknowledge your good attendance for January, four weeks is not enough to demonstrate a significant improvement. The level of discipline is based on your overall attendance history and based on this history I do not believe the union would be successful in pursuing the grievance.

I will continue to pursue a resolution regarding the premium pay you asked about and I will follow up with you on any further details I receive.

Regards,
Elisca.
Dear Elisca,
Thank you for providing the summary from Labour Relations. I understand how the attendance history looks on paper, but looking at all sides—Management's records, the CBA, and the actual events—there is a major factual error regarding the timeline that changes the merit of this grievance.
1. The "January 30th" Correction Labour Relations claims I was late on January 30th and received a "verbal reminder." This is factually incorrect. * The "chat" and the "reminder" regarding my attendance actually happened in mid-December, not January.
• I have reviewed my phone logs and records for January 30th: I had no late incidents, no phone calls from management, and no verbal reminders that day.
• This is a vital distinction: If that chat happened in December, it means I successfully corrected my behavior and maintained perfect attendance for the entire month of January. 2. The "Schedule vs. Performance" Evidence Management sees a pattern of lates, but from my side, the pattern is tied to the clock:

• From Dec 1 to Dec 19, my start time was moved to 7:00 AM for the holiday rush (Meat Dept coverage). I struggled with this change.

• Following the chat on December 19, my start time returned to 7:30 AM.

• Because my schedule was stabilized, I was on time every single day from Dec 20 through the end of January. This proves that I am a reliable worker when the workload is sustainable and the schedule is consistent.

3. Mitigation and Relief Premium (Article 14.1) I appreciate the review of the premiums. However, this is linked to the discipline: I carried the Meat Department as a solo Supervisor for 5 weeks during the peak Christmas rush without the Article 14.1 pay. The recent lapse in February was a result of the total burnout from that period, combined with a management style (Stacy) where my exhaustion was misread as a "bad tone."

4. Proportionality Management is trying to jump from a December issue to a 14-day February suspension while ignoring a full month of perfect attendance in between. If the Jan 30th "reminder" never happened, then management has skipped the necessary steps of Progressive Discipline. A maximum suspension for an isolated, burnout-related lapse after a month of improvement is excessive.

Conclusion I am not asking the Union to ignore my history, but I am asking that the Company be held to the accurate timeline. I proved I could meet the standard throughout January. I ask that you verify the "January 30" claim, as I believe management is mistakenly attributing a December conversation to January to justify this suspension.

Hello Tylor.

To follow up on my phone message today.

So you are aware, a grievance has been filed on your behalf by the Union for the two-week suspension. I have met with Labour Relations regarding the discipline and grievance filed and he informed me that you had multiple lates in December which led to a 3 day suspension. Then on January 30 you were late for approximately an hour and the manager had phoned you to inquire about your attendance. At this time, you were given a verbal reminder. Then two shifts later your manager had to call you again (around 8:15) for a 7:30 am shift. He also indicated that you had discipline issued in February, March and May of 2025 for attendance issues. Based on the discipline history all related to attendance infractions I am of the opinion that the Union would not be successful in pursuing this grievance further. However, if you have any additional information to add to this please let me know without delay and I will review again.

In addition to the above discussion, I brought up the concern of premiums not being paid. The Labour Relations rep will be reviewing this and if there are any premiums owed, he will have this resolved. Once I get a response from him I will provide you with that update.

Please let me know if you have any question on this.
Regards.

Elisca.
My apologies,

I didn’t see this email until now I was waiting for you to call yesterday though are we able to reschedule that if possible?

Hi Elisca,
Thanks for your reply.
- Yes, I had prior discipline before the recent two-week suspension: a one-week suspension and a one-day suspension at some point in the past (exact dates are unclear as long period ; I can try to find time frames if needed).

- Those were isolated incidents under heavy personal stress at home (family/relationship/housing instability from 2019–2023, including being forced out of my apartment).

- After getting my own place in 2023–2024, I had consistent on-time performance and was happy until a relapse of life issues with my ex (including being taken advantage of and forced out of my apartment again). Late 2024 to present, I've been staying at a friend's house, which has been better but not ideal.
- The current situation (double-duty overload in Receiving + meat for 5 weeks, early shifts, burnout) contributed to forgetting to set my alarm a few days due to extreme fatigue. I recognize that fully since this suspension, and I've already bought a dedicated alarm clock (first time in 20 years) to prevent phone battery/silent mode issues from repeating.

Thursday works for a call — please let me know what time is good for you.

Hello.
Did you have any previous discipline prior to the two week being issued?
I will request your discipline along with any discipline history but like to hear from the member and have their input on this.

I will also look into the relief premium.

We could set up a call on Thursday with the hope that I have more information on the above matters. Please let me know if this works for you.

Hi Elisca,

Thanks again.

- The two-week suspension was issued on Wednesday, February 4, 2026 (meeting and notice that day).

- I emailed Krista the next day, Thursday, February 5, 2026, providing context — no response yet.

- The prior discipline was a discussion in December 2025 about attendance (lateness due to burnout/overwork/earlier shifts). I owned it immediately, made changes, and had consistent on-time/early performance for several weeks afterward until the recent isolated lapse.

Happy to provide more details

Hello Tylor.
I wanted to acknowledge that I have received your email. I am working on a small project at the moment but she be able to reply again this afternoon. I didn't want you wondering when I would respond. Quick question - when did you receive this two week suspension and what was the discipline in December or prior?

Regards,
Elisca.

We will respond to your email as soon as possible during our regular office hours.

Thank you for your understanding.

Tylor Flett (Employee ID 200027954), member at Real Canadian Wholesale Club #6722, Penticton BC. Requesting advice and representation on:

• A two-week suspension for attendance that appears disproportionate and unfair.

• Ongoing workload dumping, lack of support, and inconsistent CBA application (relief premium).

Workload Context:

• Primary department: Receiving.

• From approximately December 1, 2025 to early January 2026 (~5 weeks / 35–40 days), I was required to fully cover meat supervisor duties because the meat supervisor was absent for health reasons and the other capable person in meat was also gone.

• This left just me and Carl (primarily customer-

• This left just me and Carl (primarily customer-facing and unable to handle full duties) — I was the only capable person performing ordering, coverage, and meat operations while continuing full Receiving responsibilities.

• Manager Stacy stated: “Keagan’s gone for a bit, so Tylor, I need to rely on you a lot.” I agreed to assist but was never formally assigned supervisor role, title, or premium pay.

• Temporary help from other stores (2–3 days) did not assist meat.

• Support offer (“Tell me if you need help”) was passive; no proactive assistance provided.

• Early shift start (Dec 1 onward) severely disrupted sleep and directly contributed to burnout and attendance lapse.

December Discussion:

• Conducted in office with witness (unusual), felt threatening.

• Opened with “Why are you so mad? It’s just a chat.” Not mad initially; frustrated as she repeatedly implied anger while I explained overwork/shift impact.

• Result: Shift reverted — no lateness until recent incident.

Suspension:

• One isolated late arrival. Escalated with witness, labeled “ongoing,” suspended 2 weeks — ignoring months of consistent on-time performance post-December and extreme double-duty context.

• Emailed Krista on February 5, 2026 for context — no response.

Management Style & Clash:

• I operate on commitment (reality, effort, context, self-correction matter).

• Manager operates on compliance (rules, metrics, procedure, tone — spreadsheet management). Effort/context dismissed once rule broken or tone perceived negatively.

perceived negatively.

• Clash in practice:

• Mistakes: Own/correct immediately; treated as character issue, discipline ignores improvement.

• Context/effort: Provided; dismissed as excuse.

• Tone: Intense/low voice from care; interpreted as disrespect/threat.

• Directions now short/vague with no solutions.

• Examples:

• Daily printing past-due papers to office (redundant).

• Credit memos as returns (incorrect — inventory/money impact; SAP has dedicated process). Response: “I don’t know, that’s how we do it.”

Pay Context:

• Performed meat department ordering and coverage duties for ~5 weeks without any relief premium paid or mentioned ($1.00/hour per CBA for relieving >2 days).

• December 2025 – January 2026 paystubs show no “Relief Pay” line (attached).

• Regular rate increased to $21.80/hour in late 2025 (general raise for all employees, plus $700 lump sum likely from contract settlement/retro pay).

• Previously, “Relief Pay” at $1.00/hour was applied multiple times in 2024 (attached stubs show 37 hours each instance) when covering similar duties under former manager Ben.

The suspension has caused significant financial and emotional hardship after carrying double duties without compensation or support. I owned the December issue, self-corrected consistently, and expect fair consideration of effort/context.

Can we discuss:

• Grievability of suspension under CBA?

• Grievability of suspension under CBA?

• How to provide this context to Krista/management?

• Retaliation risks and documentation/protection?

• Next steps/grievance (including missed relief premium backpay ~$350)?

Available at 1(250) 488-0902 or this email. Willing to meet or provide more/paystub excerpts.

Thank you — I value the union's support.

So get this Iv been late a few times this week maybe last week too so my manager calls me to have a talk and I own that I was late and stayed late to make up for it may promises to try harder But I'm doing two or three people's jobs at once covering gaps skipping breaks and it's exhausting. I already know being late isn't okay I don't need that explained to me it doesn't help me improve Iv punished myself so pushing it forward on me it's like being kicked well I'm down but what bothers me more is that once I acknowledged it the whole bothers me more is that once I acknowledged it the whole conversation stopped being about fixing the situation and turned into enforcing procedure and my tone. At that point, none of the work I'm actually doing mattered anymore. I care about getting the job done and I self-correct when I mess up, so when effort and context get erased and everything is reduced to a metric, it feels like judgment instead of correction And when I'm frustrated and care my tone gets intense and read as defiance instead of what it is caring and being overwhelmed. Sn I feel like this is why me snd my manager keep butting heads. It's not personal, it's that I work in reality and the system works on a spreadsheet and once the spreadsheet is violated the work my effort stops counting it's annoying

Edited

And hor I don't really want to talk about it Iv thought far to long having the "your late alot lately chats with my bosses a few times, they always suck.

So yeah I'm listening just out of wifi zone again now.

DEC 17, 2025 AT 3:17 AM

Yeah it's dumb they read my intensity as attitude but it's really that I care too much and I'm burning out from putting in effort fixing problems and holding standards in a system that cares more about rules than the actual work I'm honestly starting to think about a different job, because I don't know if I can keep working somewhere that doesn't see or value the effort I give

Well have you expressed you feel underappriated

Or that you carry like lots of other people's slack

Or more money

Or that you carry like lots of other people's slack

Or more money?

Or a more flexible shedule

Yeah if I said it ut it didn't matter I'm exhausted working the whole meat department and receiving the last two weeks I was late and I said I'd try hard to be here on time but she weaponized those words against me as if I didn't and said im being disrespectful to company by not showing up on time even tho I stay late to make up for that didn't matter

I like just wow man geez ok I see

Makes me not want try any more

Well tell her your doing more then your regular duties and it's burning you out

I did

I like just wow man geez ok I see

Makes me not want try any more

Well tell her your doing more then your regular duties and it's burning you out

I did

Also the weather has changed

And you don't drive to get there

You walk in ice rain snow or shine

But she said you said you agreed to help with the supervisor being gone

That’s human context witch has no place in her management style

Yeah but your not getting respect like a supervisor

Yea exactly

Edited

But I need to stop caring so much it's killing me

You I like to work hard but the way she handles being a manager is not a place I want to be around I can't change her core being we think about responsibilities very differently and that makes for a lot of misunderstanding

I actually care ally about my job and when I told I'm being disrespectful and don't care it pisses me off an when I try to explain I get intense I have passion for things I care about but she see it as a personal attack or defiance

She dose not here the words I'm saying at that point

It's funny she "oh well I'm never late I always make it in time" to witch I laughed and say wow never your the perfect employee lol it actually got her to think and admit sometimes and chuckled

Ha

She drives?

Yeah of course

She should walk every morning.....

Then see.

Yeah well context again no place for the in her compliance and obedience driven mindset management

I don't dislike her as a person but her management style fuck off be a human being
